India and the United States are at one in recognizing the right of free speech — which Mahatma Gandhi called 'the foundation-stone of Swaraj' or self-government- and the rights of academic freedom, trade union organization, freedom of the press, and freedom of religion. All the rights are recognized in international Covenants. There are few governments which do not at least pay lip service to them. And yet, to quote Gandhi once more, No principle exists in the abstract. Without its concrete applications it has no meaning in India as in the United States these rights have concrete application and real meaning.

It is to preserve these rights and both our nations have chosen similar paths to the development of our resources and the betterment of our people. There are differences between us in the degree to which economic growth is pursued through public enterprise, on the one hand, and private enterprise, on the other- but more important than these differences is our shared belief that the political structure in which development takes place should be democratic and should respect the human rights of each and every citizen.

Our two countries also agree that human needs are inseparable from Human rights --that while civil and political liberties are good in themselves, they are much more useful and much more meaningful in the lives of people to whom physical survival is not a matter of daily anxiety.
