b) Read the following passage and answer the questions given below:

Depression is a serious concern in India. Few companies actually address the issue of mental health. One in three people will have an episode of clinical depression in their lives. There is little awareness about the mental illnesses. While few multinationals do have programmes to promote awareness, most companies do not. Organizations should conduct emotional enrichment programmes, set up mental health helplines and organize workshops to help people who have reviewed what they are feeling. In order to sensitize people, employees are encouraged to discuss their thoughts, feeling and prejudices. Although assessments are not infallible, they are an important step towards understanding the overall mental health of a workspace. Regularly testing on their ability to handle stress by simulation exercises.

Office-goers have access to spaces for some form of physical exercise or yoga. Introducing greenery into the workplace has also shown positive results. Flexibility on working times, minimizing noise and ensuring enough time-off are other measures that reduce stress. When a colleague loses their temper often or gets into frequent fights, it is a strong signal that they might be having an emotional crisis. Cocooning themselves all of a sudden and not exhibiting the kind of enthusiasm at office at office that they used to, or not showing interest in meals.

- (i) According to the author, how can you tell if your colleagues are suffering from depression?
 - (ii) What are the measures suggested by the author to reduce stress?
 - (iii) What according to the author should organizations do to help people who have reviewed what they are feeling?
